Alasdair Nichol Chairman of Freeman's

Alasdair Nichol is Chairman and Director of Fine Art at Freeman's auction house. Founded in 1805 and located in Philadelphia, Freeman's is the oldest auction house in the United States. Having been within the same family for six generations, Mr Nichol and two colleagues acquired the company in a friendly management buy-out last year.

Born in Edinburgh, Scotland, he studied Fine Art at Gray's School of Art in Aberdeen before graduating with a Masters degree from the University of Ulster in Belfast, Northern Ireland. He was one of thirty students chosen to represent the UK in a major international traveling exhibition with venues in London, France and Germany.

In 1985, he embarked on his career in the auction world with an international house in Edinburgh before moving to Glasgow where he organized the first sale of Scottish Contemporary Art at the world renowned Glasgow School of Art. He subsequently moved to the main saleroom in London where he specialized in Modern & Impressionist Art before transferring to New York as Head of Fine Art in 1997. In 1999 he joined Freeman's and as an auctioneer of almost thirty years has sold many significant collections and set countless world records. In addition he has wielded the gavel at countless charity auctions raising millions for numerous worthwhile causes both in the UK and USA. Respected as one of the leading figures in the American Fine Art market, Mr Nichol is a former First Vice President of the Appraisers Association of America and now serves on its Advisory Board.

Since 1998 he is perhaps best known for his regular appearances on the top rated PBS program 'Antiques Roadshow' where the Clyfford Still painting that he appraised for $500,000 is amongst the most valuable finds on the show.

When not traveling Mr Nichol resides in Manhattan with his wife, Susi, and their two sons, Stevie and Lachie.
